YOUMIG

YOUMIG (“Improving institutional capacities and fostering cooperation to tackle the impacts of transnational youth migration”) is a transnational project (Interreg Danube transnational), in which 19 partners from 8 countries work together. The aim is to support local governments in using the developmental potential of youth migration, boosting their institutional capacities to enhance the scarce local evidence of youth migration, and improving policy-making with a focus on human capital.

In the project, statistical offices and academic organisations team up with local governments in a complex and customised multi-level and transnational cooperation to create local developmental strategies based on improved impact indicators of youth migration and to introduce transnationally tested tools to manage local challenges. As a result, institutions and stakeholders obtain increased capacities through an intensified cooperation.

The project is structured in six work packages (WPs). Aside from management (WP1) and communication (WP2) issues, the thematic work is distributed as follows:

WP3 has elaborated the conceptual framework for the project on the perspective of youth migration. To give a “multi-level overview”, seven case studies were elaborated on the local level by local status quo analyses in order to give an overview on perceptions and conditions of youth migration in the Danube Region.

Through a comprehensive evaluation of the locally available indicators of youth migration, WP4 identifies the shortfalls of measuring local challenges and elaborates and tests new or improved indicators of youth migration.

WP5 improves local governance capacities to manage related processes by jointly testing and introducing good pilot practices and one-stop-shop institutional units for young migrants.

WP6 concludes the work by creating transnationally tested tools for all governance levels, contributing to better strategies, policies and services related to the issue of youth migration.
